More Than a Gun

As a young boy reared in the shadow of Colorado's Rocky Mountains, the sea of high altitude Aspen leaves set ablaze with the changing colors and the crisp, cool air of fall, signaled not only the climatic metamorphosis of the land but the approach of the greatest festival of the year—hunting season. With orchards plucked, fields cut, thick harvest brews on tap and the donning of wool and blaze orange, we'd take to the land with our rifles in search of mule deer and elk.

I inherited my first big game rifle from my father, a Model 1903 Springfield that had been sporterized and passed down to him by my grandfather. Manufactured in the early 1940s by Remington, that .30-06 went with me through hell and high water, inspiring daydreams on many a sunny afternoon as I sat perched on the side of some ridge glassing for elk. The rifle—with its shortened barrel and bolt handle, custom wood stock with inlaid antler diamonds, raised cheek piece and Hoppe's-soaked leather sling—became a loyal companion on many a long journey.

I can still vividly remember the moment when, on one of my first hunts, my dad and I intercepted a small group of elk that had come barreling down a canyon. My lungs pounding, I steadied grandpa's gun as my dad blew a cow call, bringing several elk to a standstill. I steadied the crosshairs on a cow's shoulder, squeezed the trigger and listened, time somehow frozen, as the deafening crack of the .30-06 and a 180-grain bullet met with 500 pounds of animal flesh.

Our hunting guns are more than utilitarian amalgamations of wood and steel, composite and rubber. As any true-blooded American sportsman can attest, our guns affectionately symbolize the tradition we embrace, the heritage we pass on to our children. Shotgun or rifle, these pages are dedicated to the guns, glass and gear that make fall an American hunting tradition. White-tail, duck or bugling bull, we've got the guns and gear to get you through your best season yet.

Quick Shot: OnXMaps HUNT

When it comes to hunting public land, one of the most critical tools in the hunter's toolbox is your mapping system. This is particularly true out West, where millions of acres of public land are interspersed with BLM, private and state wildlife areas. I've hunted for years with an assortment of paper maps purchased through the BLM and Forest Service, but the one item I'd most hate to live without is my Garmin 64ST with OnXMaps HUNT Premium SD card. While the standard GPS unit comes with generic topo maps, the HUNT chip from OnXMaps (HuntingGPS-Maps.com) allows you to see big game hunting units, BLM, public access areas, private land with owner names, Forest Service maps and more. It's given me the confidence to hunt aras I'd normally avoid for fear of trespassing or simply losing track of exactly where I'm at on the map. It's also incredibly simple to use—the SD card fits into a slot located below the batteries on a Garmin device; once it's installed, the maps automatically populate on your GPS. You can also access OnXMaps on your computer through Garmin's free BaseCamp software. The HUNT chip is $99, or you can purchase the HUNT App for your smartphone or iPad ($29 for a yearly subscription). The HUNT App allows you to download and store maps on your phone when there's no data service. GD™

.284 Winchester

The .284 was introduced by Winchester, in 1963, for its Model 88 lever-action and Model 100 semi-auto rifles. Both have since been discontinued. This is the first American commercial cartridge to have a rebated, or undercut, rim of smaller diameter than the body of the case, though British and European designers used this type of case years ago. The .284 Winchester has the rim diameter of the .30-06 and the body diameter of the belted magnums. This provides increased case capacity in a relatively short case. The cartridge is designed for short actions and will increase the performance of these short, light rifles. Ballistics are practically identical to the .280 Remington. There is no difference in killing power, range, or capability between the two (except in some gun writers' imaginations!). This cartridge has recently staged a well-deserved comeback and continues to prosper, particularly as a basis for short-action wildcats. For a short time, the Savage Model 99 lever-action and Browning's BLR were available in .284. No major gun makers now offer this chambering. GDTM

Fed with CCI's new Varmint Tip ammo, Savage's new semi-auto A17 in .17 HMR is a varmint hunter's dream. // JON R. SUNDRA

When the .17 Winchester Super Magnum (WSM) rim-fire cartridge debuted two years ago, it did so not in a Winchester, but in the Savage B-Mag, a rifle designed from scratch around this hottest of rimfires. This year Savage pulled a similar move by working with CCI to come up with the first affordable semi-auto rifle chambered for the .17 Hornady Magnum Rimfire (HMR). Savage and CCI, as you may know, are among the dozens of firearms-related companies now under the Vista Outdoor family. For this cooperative project, the CCI people developed a special load, A17 Varmint Tip, which boasts a 2,650 fps muzzle velocity for its 17-grain polymer tipped bullet—that's 100 fps faster than all other similar loads offered by Hornady, Winchester, Remington, PMC and even CCI.

SAVAGE A17

TYPE:	Delayed blowback, semi-automatic
CALIBER:	.17 HMR
BARREL:	22 in., 1:9-in. twist, button-rifled
OVERALL LENGTH:	42 in.
WEIGHT:	5.4 lbs.
STOCK:	Injection-molded polymer, black matte finish
SIGHTS:	Drilled and tapped for optics
TRIGGER:	Savage AccuTrigger, adjustable to 2.5 lbs.
CAPACITY:	10 rounds
MSRP:	$465
MANUFACTURER:	Savage Arms; SavageArms.com

The .17 HMR was introduced back in 2002, so why did it take 13 years for someone to come up with a self-loader for this highly popular cartridge? Good question. The answer lies in the fact that no existing semi-auto rimfire rifle of sporting configuration could handle it. Even though the cartridge had a maximum average breech pressure (MABP) only 2,000 psi more than the .22 LR and .22 Magnum (WMR), and the fact that a few existing semi-autos were successfully adapted to the latter, the .17 HMR posed special challenges.

All existing semi-auto rimfire rifles employ straight blowback actions, which are not capable of handling high-intensity centerfire pistol and rifle calibers. With a blowback there is no locking mechanism per se, and only the spring(s) that power the bolt keep the action closed. Upon ignition, the equal and opposite reaction of launching a bullet forward has the cartridge case pushing backwards. The mass of the bolt itself and its spring provide enough resistance to keep the action closed the few microseconds it takes for the bullet to exit the muzzle and the pressure to drop.

With the .17 HMR, however, things become more complicated because we're talking about a bullet weight range of 15.5 to 20 grains—that's half the weight (and half the resistance) of the 40-grain payload of the .22 LR or .22 Magnum. As a result, the higher pressures, higher bullet velocity and greater bolt thrust were different enough that existing actions were not safely adaptable. To do it right required a new action, and apparently no major American arms manufacturer thought the demand for a semi-auto .17 HMR was enough to warrant the investment...at least not for 13 years, anyway.

Enter the A17, which is based on a delayed blowback action. There are many ways to keep the action closed a few microseconds longer, but all delayed blowbacks employ the same principle: The bolt performs some other operation before it can overcome the inertia of the bolt and spring and begins its rearward movement. With the A17 there's a collapsible lug housed in the top surface of the bolt that engages a slot in the ceiling of the receiver. The rear surfaces of the lug and the recess it bears against are angled to form a cam surface, which acts like an ordinary door latch. The rearward force exerted on the bolt forces the lug to collapse, allowing the bolt to open and move to the rear. It's really quite a complicated mix of mass, resistance and timing—enough that it took the folks at Savage 2½ years of R&D to get it right.

The A17 sent to us for review weighed 5.4 pounds and measured 42 inches in length. It feeds from a 10-round rotary magazine that fits flush with the belly of the stock. The free-floated, 22-inch barrel is button-rifled with a 1:9-inch twist and tapers to .610 at the muzzle, making it fairly stout for a .17 caliber. The safety is of the cross bolt type, housed in the forward portion of the trigger guard bow and therefore similar to those found on most pump and semi-auto shotguns. The injection-molded polymer stock is of the straight comb classic style with just a slight ¼-inch drop from the point of the comb to the rubber butt-padded heel. Pre-installed Weaver-type scope ring bases are standard, as is Savage's AccuTrigger, which is user-adjustable down to 2.5 lbs.

Another member of the Vista Outdoor Group is Weaver, so it was not coincidental that along with the A17 we received a KASPA (an Indian word meaning "clear vision") 3-9x40mm rimfire scope and Weaver rings. This particular scope comes with three elevation dials calibrated to the 40-grain trajectories of the .22 LR and .22 Mag., and for the 17-grain polycarbonate-tipped bullets of the .17 HMR. Zeroed-in dead on at 100 yards, the 17-grain bullets will impact about 2 inches low at 150, and 6½ inches low at 200, which is really about the practical limit of this little cartridge. Of course with the HMR turret installed, you simply dial those respective distances and hold dead on. With the slightly flatter trajectory of the A17 Varmint Tip load, we found those respective points of impact to be about ½ inch higher at 150 and 1 inch higher at 200—not enough to worry about for general pest-shooting purposes. It should be noted that all existing .17 HMR loads, which range from 15.5 to 20 grains, are safe to fire in this gun.

All told we put nearly 200 rounds through the test gun, which, if not a pre-production example, was of the first production run. As such, we had three failures to feed. Two magazines were provided, and if there is a trick to charging them, I failed to discover it. I consider myself rather dexterous, but I found stuffing 10 rounds into these magazines rather challenging. Also, on several occasions, firing the first shot had the magazine drop out of the rifle. This is in spite of the fact that, after the first such occurrence, I really slapped it home and got an audible click doing so. Again, this was early production for both rifle and ammo, so I fully expect such teething glitches to be addressed. Accuracy was more than acceptable, though the two standard loads proved slightly more accurate than the A17 ammo. The best group (.75 inches) came with Hornady's 17-grain V-Max load. GDTM

Quickly learn the step-by-step secrets of how to make money gunsmithing part-time, full-time, or as a retirement income.

Currently there is a HUGE Demand for Gunsmiths.

Millions of guns need fixing. Most of the old-time gunsmiths have retired and haven't been replaced because previously there wasn't a cost effective way to quickly train individuals to become gunsmiths and help them make money fast. This has created a chronic shortage and a huge opportunity for you.

Gunsmithing is a recession-proof business. Even in tough times people spend money to get their guns repaired or professionally cleaned. It's a lot cheaper than buying a new one and they still want and need them for hunting and self defense. You can even work part-time right from your home. Your one time investment in the course could provide you with a lifetime of income and opportunity.

Here's what you will learn in your FREE VIDEO!

How AGI's Professional Gunsmithing Course changed Robert Briskey's life: "Within one short year I opened up my own firearms repair and custom refinishing shop. My business is exceeding my dreams. The freedom I enjoy being self-employed is priceless. Without the opportunity that AGI's course offered, my dream would be just that, a dream." Robert T. Briskey, Battle Hen Armory

You don't have to wait to start gunsmithing! It only takes a relatively small investment to get started. As soon as you begin watching the videos you will be able to start making repairs. Anytime you run into a problem, you just pop in the DVD on the subject or model gun that you need information on and do a quick review.

Couldn't get a better recommendation: "I made the mistake of taking another cheaper gunsmithing course. I knew I made a mistake when I read in one of my lesson books that for further instructional help, go to the AGI website and get a DVD on the subject. When other schools are giving YOU that kind of acknowledgement, then you have to be the best." Gordon Fisher

With hunting season quickly approaching, see more in the field with these great riflescopes, rangefinders and binoculars.

DAVID HART

Game-Changing Optics

We put a lot of thought into the guns we shoot—at times maybe a bit more than we should. Pretty much any rifle from any major gun maker will shoot straight enough to make a clean shot at some pretty remarkable ranges.

What makes a big difference in the field or at the range is often the glass we use. What good is a rifle if you can't find your target through your scope? The same is true for binoculars and spotting scopes. Cheap glass will strain your eyes, fog up or otherwise hamper your hunt.

The good news is there are hundreds of choices when it comes to high-quality scopes, rangefinders, binoculars and spotting scopes, and manufacturers continue to make improvements every year. Here's a look at some great choices to help you bring home more game this season.

VORTEX VIPER HS LR

Long-range shooting is one thing. Making a clean, one-shot kill at long distances is entirely different. Vortex's Viper HS LR Series scopes are packed with all the features you need to hit your mark with every squeeze of the trigger. Three magnification ranges are available with first-focal plane reticles, and all Viper HS LR models come with an exposed target-style elevation range and a capped windage turret. The 6-24x50 has a 65 MOA maximum elevation adjustment, a 42 MOA maximum windage adjustment and a 50-yards-to-infinity parallax setting. It's built with a 30mm aluminum tube and fully multi-coated glass. ($999; VortexOptics.com)

SWAROVSKI X5(I)

The long-range optics market got some serious competition with the introduction of Swarovski's X5(i) long-range scope, the first true long-range scope from the Austrian company. Built with Swarovski's high standards and highest quality materials, the X5(i) is available in three versions: 3.5-18x50, 5-25x56 and 5-25x56 with 1/8 MOA adjustment. All three include a sub-zero feature that allows you to go below the sight-in distance, and all three offer three different reticles. They are built with the highest quality glass available. The 5-25 has a max elevation MOA of 82 and a max windage MOA of 50. ($3,499; SwarovskiOptik.com)

WEAVER KASPA RIMFIRE SCOPE

Weaver's KASPA rimfire scope isn't just a high-quality scope—it's also affordable. The 3-9x40mm scope is the perfect addition to your favorite squirrel or varmint gun and will last as long as the gun itself. Built with Weaver's high standards and backed by the company name, the KASPA comes with fully multi-coated glass, a dual-X reticle and fogproof, shockproof and waterproof construction. It's available in matte black or with pink accents. ($178; WeaverOptics.com)

TRIJICON ACCUPOWER

Trijicon's AccuPower riflescopes are at home on the range and in the field, making them the perfect all-purpose scope. The illuminated reticle is powered by a lithium battery, which lasts at least 31 hours at the highest setting, and it includes 11 settings with an "off" feature between each setting. The glass is multi-coated, and the reticle is second focal plane. Each scope is available in at least three reticle choices, and you can choose from 1-4x24, 2.5-10-56, 3-9x40 and 4-16x50. ($699; Trijicon.com)

BUSHNELL ELITE 4500 LG

A longtime leader in affordable high-quality optics, Bushnell again upped the ante with its Elite series scopes. The 4500 LG is a great all-purpose riflescope and is available in 2.5-10, 4-16, 8-32 and 6-24 powers. All models are coated with Rain Guard HD, a permanent water-resistant coating that allows you to see and shoot better in poor conditions. The 4500 Series are waterproof, shockproof and fogproof, and all glass is fully multi-coated. The 4-16x40 is available in Multi-X or DOA 600 CF reticles. It also comes with 1/4 MOA resettable windage and elevation adjustments. ($459; Bushnell.com)

NITE SITE EAGLE

Nite Site's Eagle sighting system isn't a scope. Instead, it's a night sighting system that attaches to your rifle's scope, converting it to a temporary but effective night vision scope. You can use your rifle day or night simply by removing the Nite Site Eagle and then by quickly and easily reattaching it for a night hunt. It comes with an illuminator module and viewing screen, a digital IR camera module, multi-diameter scope clamps and sleeves and a lithium-ion battery, among other parts. All parts fit into an included carrying case. The Eagle has an effective range of up to 550 yards, allowing you to shoot varmints that can get away from other hunters. ($1,412; NiteSite.com/us)

Deerslayer III

Deerslayer II

The Ithaca Deerslayer III is designed for extreme accuracy at long ranges. Barrel and receiver are both carved out of solid pieces of steel and CNC machined to aerospace tolerances by American craftsmen using American steel. This attention to manufacturing precision yields a gun that is built like no other.

NIKON PROSTAFF 7i RANGEFINDER

New for 2015, Nikon's Prostaff 7i rangefinder is faster, lighter, more accurate and just plain better than many of the other rangefinders available today. It takes just a half-second to accurately measure out to 1,300 yards. The 7i weighs just 6.2 ounces, and the viewer has 6x magnification. Measured increments are .1 yards out to 1,000 yards and 1 yard from 1,000 to 1,300 yards. It's waterproof and includes a target priority switch, allowing you to measure overlapping subjects, and it comes with a horizontal and actual distance display mode. ($300; NikonSportOptics.com)

G7 BR2 RANGEFINDER

Rangefinders are a great tool for any big game hunter, but they are essential for anyone who shoots long distances. G7's BR2 Rangefinder isn't just a rangefinder—it's a ballistics calculator that takes the guesswork out of such things as incline angle, barometric pressure and temperature. Designed by Mike and Aaron Davidson, the same guys that founded long-range rifle company Gunwerks, the G7 rangefinder is programmable for up to five different cartridge combinations and includes inputs for ballistic coefficient, muzzle velocity, sight height and others. The functional range is 1,500 yards. The unit weighs just 14.3 ounces. ($1,599; GSeven.com)

ACCURACY AS LEGENDARY AS ITS NAME.

The Deerslayer III is capable of shooting four inch groups at 200 yards. It's as close to a big bore rifle that shoots sabot slugs as you can get.

The Deerslayer II brings Deerslayer accuracy to a lighter gun that is easier to travel with in the field.

Swarovski ATX

SWAROVSKI ATX SPOTTING SCOPE

No name in the hunting optics industry says "quality" like Swarovski. Its newest spotting scope, the ATX, will likely be the last spotting scope you'll ever own. Optional accessories include a digital camera mounting base and a TLS APO telephoto lens, as well as iPhone adapter kit. The 95 weighs 75.8 ounces. ($3,775; SwarovskiOptik.com)

Nightforce TS80

NIGHTFORCE TS80 SPOTTING SCOPE

A good spotting scope can increase your odds on any big game hunt. A great spotting scope like Nightforce's TS80 can give you an even better chance of coming home with a cooler full of meat. It's packed with features that reduce eye and neck strain, and it's easy to use. The TS80 is adjustable from 20- to 60-power and has an 80mm objective, an adjustable eyecup to accommodate eyeglasses and a large focus ring that focuses from 20 feet to infinity. The glass is fully multi-coated, the body is shockproof and coated with non-slip rubber armor, and it is assembled in the USA. ($1,595; NightforceOptics.com)

Zeiss Victory SF

Trijicon HD Binoculars

ZEISS VICTORY SF

Built with the finest materials and precision German craftsmanship, these binoculars will last you a lifetime...and then some. Available in 8x42 and 10x42, they include a new seven-lens eyepiece, fully multi-coated glass, a faster focusing wheel and a new design that fits in your hands better than any pair of binoculars you've held before. ($2,889; Zeiss.com)

Trijicon's HD binoculars combine all the quality and standards of their other products to give you everything you need in a pair of field glasses. The HD is available in 10x42 and 8x42 and comes with fully multi-coated fluoride lenses, a compact magnesium body, rubberized armor and an ocular lens focus system. Norma turned the 6.5-284 into a SAAMI-approved cartridge and helped transform a former wildcat into a popular long-range round.

that would take nearly 15 years to germinate.

I was on the telephone with the Savage Custom Shop, discussing the possible options for a semi-custom rifle, when the lady on the other end of the line told me I could mix and match any of the calibers and features that Savage produced. I have a Winchester 70 in .300 Win. Mag. that is very near and dear to me, as well as several safari guns that I wouldn't trade for love or money. I also have a Ruger 77 in .22-250 Remington that handles, quite efficiently, my varmint rifle needs, but I had a bit of a hole in the arsenal. I perused the list of Savage chambering options when my eyebrow cocked involuntarily: They chamber their target guns in 6.5-284 Norma. I knew immediately that the cartridge was decided.

The .284 Winchester was introduced in 1963 as a cartridge that would reproduce the ballistics of the .280 Remington but in a short, .308-length action, more specifically the Winchester Model 88 lever-action and the Model 100 autoloader. While a sound design in its own right, it never really caught on. However, the wildcatters wasted no time in tinkering with the new case, which has a rebated rim and nearly straight-walled body, to see what its potential was. The 6mm-284 is still a moderately popular wildcat, but the 6.5-284 really showed some good long-range capabilities, and it became a favorite of the target community.

Norma ended the wildcat status

Reloading the 6.5-284 Norma

The 6.5-284 Norma is a fantastic cartridge providing performance on par with the .270 Win. Here's how to get the most out of your loads.

PHIL MASSARO

The 6.5mm rifles have always intrigued me, irrespective of the case in which the bullets were loaded. The bullets are an amazing collection of shapes and lengths, rivaling our own American-as-apple-pie .30 caliber. They offer a fantastic sectional density, are available in weights up to 160 grains, and the sleek 120- and 140-grain slugs give a ballistic coefficient that will rival nearly any other bore diameter. Simply put, I feel that the 6.5mm bullets perform well above their perceived level, and they do so with considerably less recoil than anything larger.

I've long been a fan of the classic 6.5 bores—the 6.5x54mm Mannlicher-Schoenauer and the 6.5x55mm Swedish Mauser—but the American version, the .264 Winchester Magnum, was the first of the lot to catch my eye. My good buddy, Col. Le Frogg, had a push-feed Winchester Model 70 chambered in .264 Win. Mag. I had a grand time playing with and developing handloads using the 140-grain Nosler Partition and the 160-grain Hornady Interlock. That rifle opened my eyes to the potential of the 6.5mm bore diameter and planted a seed early in the 21st century by adopting the 6.5-284 as its own and achieving SAAMI approval for the design. The case achieves the maximum potential of the 6.5mm bore without being grossly overbore, as some have labeled the .264 Mag. and newer .26 Nosler. It will push the 140-grain slugs to velocities of nearly 2,900 fps, giving a very flat trajectory and plenty of killing energy for deer-size game...and even a bit larger if you use a premium bullet.

The beauty of the bore diameter—those long, lean bullets that perform so well on game animals—can be the undoing of the cartridge if you try and adhere to the original, short-action cartridge length of 2.800 inches; it works much better with a 3.228-inch maximum overall length, from a long-action rifle. I ordered my Savage in the Model 116 configuration—a long-action receiver—to allow me to seat the bullets out as far as I'd like, so I can use the full capacity of the case. The additional length of bolt pull is irrelevant in comparison to the accuracy and velocity potential of the longer length cartridge.

That case uses powders in the range of Hodgdon's Varget and Alliant Reloder 15 on the fast side, for lighter bullets, to IMR 4350, Reloder 19 and 22 and H4831SC on the slower side of things. My gun likes charges of IMR4350 and H4831SC on the high side of the scale, for most applications. The 6.5-284

A wide array of bullets exists for the 6.5-284, which is a great thing for the reloader. Swift, Norma and Berger all produce excellent bullets.

Norma case will hold between 58 and 60 grains of water, depending on the brand of case used. I like to spark the 6.5-284 with a Federal Gold Medal Match GM210M large rifle primer, as I've found these to give a dependable and consistent ignition, in addition to the best accuracy.

I've found several bullets that work very well in my 6.5-284, including the Hornady 140-grain boat tail spitzer and 160-grain round nose Interlock, the 140-grain Swift A-Frame, the 140-grain North Fork hollowpoint, and the 140-grain Berger VLD. My particular rifle shows a definite preference for flat base bullets; the boat tails are plenty accurate, but the velocities drop off quite a bit for some reason. That's just fine by me, because I can hit game inside of 400 yards with the flat base slugs. All of the loads I've spent time with so far have proved to be sub-MOA, and that's the kind of performance you can come to expect when you're behind the trigger of the 6.5-284.

I'd highly recommend you obtain a good set of reloading dies. I prefer the Redding Competition dies; they offer a full-length sizing die that incorporates a bushing of specific diameter that will extend the life of your brass. Simply measure the outside diameter of a loaded cartridge, using the brass case that you want to reload, and Redding will provide a bushing that will minimize the squeezing and resizing of the neck portion of your cases, so you can use the cases for many more shots than usual. I also like the micrometer-adjustable seating die from Redding; it allows us reloaders to dial in a very specific seating depth. This is crucial for long-range accuracy, as the repeatability of the Redding seater die will give the consistent product that we reloaders are after.

If you weigh your cases and bullets, separating them into lots, and weigh every powder charge, you'll more than likely get some superb results from the 6.5-284 Norma, which will provide performance on par or better than the venerable .270 Win. in a package that is ballistically superior when it comes to the longer ranges and in a cartridge that gives less perceived recoil than does the .270-class and larger cartridges. If you'd like to hunt bear with your 6.5-284, look toward the longest and heaviest of the 6.5mm bullets—either the 160-grain Hornady Interlock or the 156-grain Norma Oryx will deliver the fantastic penetration for which the 6.5 bore is known. I look forward to using mine for years to come. GDTM

Fowl Weather Shotguns

From pumps to side-by-sides, we've gathered all the best duck and goose shotguns for 2015.

BRAD FITZPATRICK

Not so long ago, a shotgun was a shotgun, and the same scattergun you used for quail probably also served for hunting waterfowl, turkeys, small game...maybe even deer. If you lived in rural America, there's also a good chance this shotgun served as your go-to home defense weapon, too.

Shotguns can still accomplish all of those tasks, but modern scatterguns are far more specialized. This divergent evolution has created a number of closely related shotgun subspecies that evolved to perform a specific task—upland guns got lighter, rifled deer guns became more accurate, and target shotguns adopted a whole list of new features like adjustable combs, mercury recoil reducers, barrel weights and more that further separated them from field guns.

Waterfowl guns went their own way. There was a long list of features that duck and goose hunters wanted: a gun that was slathered in camo so it didn't cause birds to flare, the ability to digest powerful magnum loads, and the ability to cycle reliably in wet and mucky conditions. From that original blueprint, we saw the first dedicated waterfowl guns emerge, and today the market is filled with guns born for the duck blind. Here's a look at what's new, what's innovative and what's affordable in waterfowl shotguns.

Benelli SuperNova

Benelli is best known for its Inertia Driven line of semi-autos, but the company also offers a line of budget-priced pump guns that are versatile and tough. These guns have a steel skeleton overmolded with a lightweight polymer that is impervious to the elements. The SuperNova line can handle anything from light target loads to 3½-inch magnums, and thanks to the ComforTech stock, you won't lose any fillings when firing heavy loads. The enlarged trigger guard and full-length slide make this gun easy to use even when wearing heavy gloves. ($549; BenelliUSA.com)

Browning BPS

The bottom loading and ejecting Browning Pump Shotgun (BPS) is derived from an original John Browning design, and with no ejection port, the action is completely enclosed and protected from the elements. Plus, if you're a reloader, your empties hit right on top of your boots, so they're easy to find. The tang-mounted safety makes this a great gun for right- and left-handed shooters, and the steel receiver and twin steel action bars keep the BPS cycling smoothly in all conditions. If you like to make the biggest bang in the blind, you can opt for the 10-gauge version in either black or Mossy Oak Shadow Grass Blades. ($699-$949; Browning.com)

Ithaca Model 37 Waterfowl

The Ithaca and Browning models both utilize bottom feeding and ejection, but the Ithaca comes with a more traditional cross-bolt safety as opposed to the Browning's tang. With a new headquarters in Upper Sandusky, Ohio, and a host of new machining equipment, Ithaca is back and better than ever, and the robust Waterfowl model is a prime example of the company's commitment to excellence. The steel receiver offers a wide port at the bottom for easy loading and unloading, and the camo dip is tough and covers the whole gun effectively. ($999; IthacaGun.com)

Mossberg 835

Mossberg has been making durable pump shotguns for decades, and over that time the brand has been at the forefront of duck gun technology. It was one of the first brands to offer a 3½-inch gun, one of the first to port its barrels and the first to produce some of the earliest factory camo shotguns. Mossberg now offers the 3½-inch 835 in several variants, including the new Duck Commander line. All 835s come with a tang safety and LPA adjustable bladed trigger, and now you can choose models with their Recoil Reduction system, which helps tame the recoil of even the hardest-kicking magnums. ($617-$670; Mossberg.com)

Remington 870

Remington's famous pump has been around for five decades, and there are plenty of 870s leaning in duck blinds every year from Mississippi to Manitoba. These guns feature steel receivers, and the Super Mag versions can handle heavy 3½-inch loads. And though much of the 870 design has remained the same, the addition of Remington's new SuperCell recoil pad has made shooting magnums way more comfortable. Super Mag guns come with a crossbolt safety and are available in a variety of colors including black and full-dip Mossy-Oak Bottomlands camo. ($629; Remington.com)

Browning A5

Escort Extreme Magnum

Remington V3

Winchester SXP

Winchester's Model 12 set the standard for pump gun reliability in the 1900s, and the company's current SXP line represents the evolution of the Model 12. The SXP comes with a lightweight, durable aluminum-alloy receiver, and the inertia-assisted pump action does make this one of the fastest pumps around. The Inflex recoil pad, which is found on several Browning and Winchester shotguns, is designed to absorb and redistribute much of the gun's rearward movement so that you aren't getting slapped in the face by the comb with every shot, a nice touch. The new Realtree Max-5 version blends in to the marsh and is available in 12- and 20-gauge and in 3- and 3½-inch models, so the Winchester pump has you covered. ($459-$499; WinchesterGuns.com)

SEMI-AUTOS

Benelli Super Black Eagle II

The Super Black Eagle (SBE) was the gun that helped convert many duck hunters to Inertia-Driven shotguns, and the current SBE II remains a very popular choice for wildfowl hunters. The Inertia system's never-say-die attitude keeps these guns running through snow and rain, and I've seen two SBEs that have survived for decades in the corrosive salt spray of Texas' Gulf Coast duck hunting areas, an impressive feat for any scattergun. The

ComforTech stock helps reduce felt recoil and allows for faster follow-up shots, and Benelli decided it wouldn't leave southpaws out in the cold, so the company makes a left-handed version of the Super Black Eagle as well. ($1,569; BenelliUSA.com)

Browning A5

The A5 is a blend of old design aesthetics and new technology. On the outside, it looks much like the Humpbacks of years gone by, but on the inside, Browning ditched the long recoil-operated design of the original gun and went instead with a short-recoil system known as Kinematic Drive that is reliable and innovative. Rather than utilizing gas, the new Kinematic Drive uses recoil to operate the action, making for a cleaner and more reliable system. I've used the A5 on mallards in Arkansas' flooded timber, and it has proven to be well balanced and reliable, just like the original. But unlike the original, you can get your new A5 slathered in a variety of cool camo patterns including classic Mossy Oak Bottomlands for 2015. ($1,500-$1,760; Browning.com)

Escort Extreme Magnum

Most hunters are familiar with Browning and Winchester, but far fewer have heard of Escort. That's slowly changing, though, and more and more shooters are beginning to appreciate this value-driven brand imported by Legacy Sports International in Reno, Nevada. This Turkish-made, gas-operated semi-auto comes with a 3½-inch chamber; a FAST loading system that feeds the first shell in the magazine directly into the chamber; raised, soft-touch grip panels; and a Nickel Chrome Moly barrel designed for steel shot. It's available in black or camo in both left- and right-handed versions. ($650; LegacySports.com)

Franchi Affinity/Intensity

Franchi's partnership with Benelli has resulted in the development of the Affinity and Intensity semi-autos, Inertia-driven guns chambered for 3- and 3½-inch shells, respectively. The Affinity is light and trim, and it works equally well for teal in close and geese on the perimeter. The Affinity, with its larger chamber, can accommodate magnum shells yet manages to cycle 2¾-inch shells thanks to the versatility of the Inertia system. The inclusion of adjustable shims with every new Affinity and Intensity allows the shooters to, in effect, sight-in their shotgun, something that was never before possible. Both guns are available in a variety of configurations with synthetic and—for 2015—wood stocks, and both guns represent one of the best bargains in waterfowl guns. ($729; FranchiUSA.com)

Remington Versa Max/V3

Remington introduced the Versa Max back in 2010, an answer to Benelli's Super Black Eagle, and the gun was immediately successful. The Versaport gas system is reliable enough to fire both 2¾-inch shells and 3½-inch magnums (I've used the same gun for duck and dove hunting, and it worked well with light loads of #8s and heavy #4s). The Versa Max is also available in left-handed models. For 2015, Remington introduced the V3, a 3-inch version that utilizes the Versa Max's gas system and dual pistons that regulate gas effectively. Lighter and shorter than the Versa Max, the V3 is an ideal gun for those who don't need that extra power or receiver length. ($895 for the V3 black synthetic, $1,427 for the Versa Max synthetic; Remington.com)

Stoeger M3000/M3500

Stoeger is part of the Benelli/Franchi family, and, as such, the technology from the Italian semi-autos has made its way to the Stoeger guns. Primarily, that means you can now get the time-tested Inertia system in a budget-priced semi-auto with a surprising number of standard features. The M3000 line is available with black or camo synthetic stocks and handles everything from light 2¾- to heavy 3-inch loads without the need for adjustment. The larger M3500 can also accommodate 3½-inch magnums in its cavernous action, and both guns come with shim kits and fiber-optic front sights. If you're a fan of Inertia guns, but you're on a budget, the M3000 and M3500 are great options. ($599; StoegerIndustries.com)

The Straight Scoop

While incredibly popular in Europe, straight-pull rifles have never caught on in the states. Here's an inside look at the straight-pull action and several modern straight-pulls currently available.

JON R. SUNDRA

Why is it that the newest rifles coming out of Europe are straight pulls, yet not a single American manufacturer offers such a gun? In centerfire rifles, I'm talking about the Blaser R8 and R93, the Heym SR-30, and the Merkel RX Helix; and in rimfire, the Anschütz 1727 and Browning T-Bolt. All are of foreign manufacture and differ greatly in mechanical details, but all share the basic characteristic of having a simple pull/push bolt cycle.

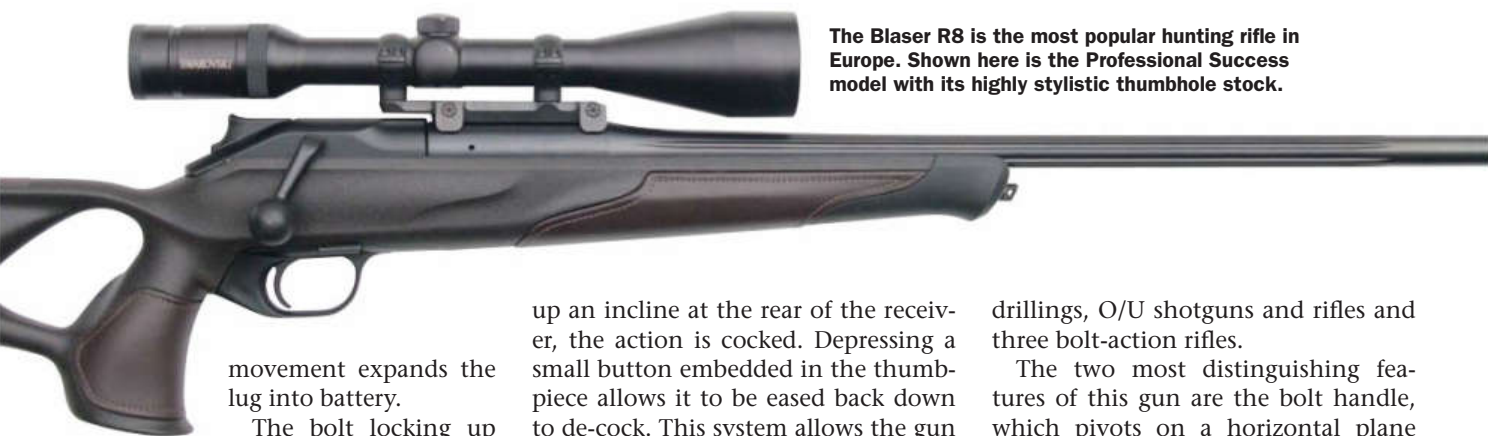

The straight pull concept is not a new idea. There was the Austro-Hungarian Steyr-Mannlicher M95, the Swiss Schmidt-Rubin, the Canadian Ross and our own Lee-Navy—all straight-pull military rifles—all came on the scene during a 20-year period spanning the onset of the 20th century. Reducing the four movements required to cycle a conventional bolt-action to just a simple pull/push motion is simply intuitive. The uplift of the handle on a conventional bolt action when shouldered is not only awkward, but the muscles involved are rarely used. If a fired case is even slightly sticky on the upstroke of the handle, it can range from difficult to impossible. That's why so many hunters lower the gun to the port arms position to reload; it's the only way they can get enough leverage to initiate primary extraction.

The Blaser is the most unconventional and complex of the straight pulls

The best known and established of the current straight pulls is the Blaser R8 with its radial locking system. Lock-up is achieved via a steel tube, the front portion of which is comprised of 13 splines. Each of these splines, or fingers, has a small bulge at the forward end, which together form a radial locking lug that engages an annular groove within the barrel extension to provide a 360-degree lock-up. Instead of the barrel threading into the receiver, it simply lays in a V-block of aluminum that's imbedded in the stock and held there with two threaded studs that extend downward from the barrel and are engaged by two Allen-head nuts held captive within the stock. The barrel's only connection with the bolt is when the bolt head enters the barrel extension and locks up with it. The bolt itself does not rotate at all; it simply reciprocates back and forth. In fact, the bolt handle is not even attached to the bolt, but rather to a bolt carrier. The handle rotates rearward in a short 5/8-inch arc before the bolt actually starts moving. It is this initial rearward rocking motion of the bolt handle that contracts the circular locking lug, unlocking the action. Conversely, the last 5/8 inches of the bolt handle's forward movement expands the lug into battery.

The bolt locking up directly with the barrel makes possible two important features: First, the receiver becomes a non-stressed component allowing it to be made of aluminum, and second, it allows barrel/caliber interchangeability. On the Blaser the bolt can be removed from the carrier in about five seconds without tools and replaced with another of a different head to accommodate caliber changes across cartridge families. Bottom line is that you can go from, say, a .204 Ruger to a .338 Winchester Magnum in about two minutes.

The newest straight-pull on the scene is Merkel's superb RX Helix. Like the Blaser, the Helix's bolt head locks up with the barrel rather than the receiver, so barrel/caliber interchangeability is one of its features. But unlike the Blaser, there is no rocking of the handle. In fact, the handle does not pivot at all; it simply moves back and forth, and in so doing rotates a multi-lug bolt head in and out of battery. Not only that, the bolt carrier and the handle are connected by a rack-and-pinion arrangement whereby there is almost a 1:2 ratio of handle-to-bolt movement. While the handle moves only 2½ inches, the bolt moves 4¼ inches. You can't believe how fast this action can be cycled from the shoulder. Switching barrels/bolt heads/magazines on this gun can be done in about 30 seconds without tools. Reassembly is just as fast.

A feature the RX shares with the Blaser is that it must be manually cocked, but only for the first shot. By forcibly pushing a deeply serrated cocking lever up an incline at the rear of the receiver, the action is cocked. Depressing a small button embedded in the thumb-piece allows it to be eased back down to de-cock. This system allows the gun to be safely carried with a live round in the chamber—a great safety feature.

The least-known straight-pull rifle is the Heym SR-30 produced by a German company situated in the tiny village of Gleichamberg in Thuringia. Heym is best known for its superb double rifles, but this small company also makes a diverse array of other gun types, including box and sidelock drillings, O/U shotguns and rifles and three bolt-action rifles.

The two most distinguishing features of this gun are the bolt handle, which pivots on a horizontal plane aligned with and parallel to the barrel bore, as opposed to the Blaser's vertical pivoting movement. The other is the locking "lugs," for want of a better term, which consist of six floating ball bearings oriented on 60-degree centers around the bolt head that engage an annular groove inside the receiver. With the closing of the bolt, these ball bearings are supported from beneath by a steel tube within the bolt body. As the bolt closes, this inner tube cams the ball bearings outward to engage the annular groove inside the receiver. It's a slick and highly innovative design.

The basic mechanics as to how the handle moves and activates the locking system on the Heym SR-30 is similar to that of the Browning T-Bolt rimfire rifle. The specifics of the locking system itself, however, couldn't be more different. Essentially, the locking lugs consist of two circular "ears" on either side of the bolt body which, when in battery, fit into corresponding holes at either side of the receiver. The bolt handle is of a shallow L-shape and pivots on a vertical pin at its apex. The initial rearward movement of the bolt handle pivots the forward tip of the L outwards, pulling the circular locking lugs out of their recesses. It's difficult to put into words, but a photo of the open action is the next best thing.

Lastly, we come to the Anschütz 1727, which was originally designed as a Biathlon rifle but is now offered as a sporter. Because reloading speed is essential to that Olympic sport, the Anschütz folks felt a straight-pull action would be just the ticket. And because the bolt travel needed to cycle the .22 LR was so short, they also concluded the action could be operated with just two fingers. Toward that end, they designed a bolt handle in the shape of an inverted "L" that extends downward along the right side of the stock to where the forefinger alone can open the action—and the thumb close it—without disturbing one's grip on the rifle. The RX Helix employs a multi-lug rotary bolt head that can be removed and exchanged in mere seconds.

The Heym SR-30 is the least known among the Euro straight pulls; its ball bearing locking system is unique.

The Browning T-Bolt employs a unique locking system. Two holes at either side of the receiver serve as abutments for the circular locking lugs.

tion is absolutely amazing; they get off shots about every two seconds.

One of the downsides to the straight-pull rifle, regardless of the design, is that none of them can offer the powerful camming force of a manual turnbolt to chamber and/or extract a recalcitrant cartridge or case. For that, nothing can match the conventional bolt-action. But in all honesty, that's mostly a problem with handloads rather than factory ammo.

Another is that all the aforementioned centerfires are much more complex than a conventional turnbolt and thus expensive to manufacturer. With the exception of the Browning T-Bolt, which goes for $749, all the others start at around $3,000.

Other than that, it's hard to fault the straight-pull concept. The operational movements are more ergonomic and natural; the motions required are cut in half, as is the time needed to complete them. Sooner or later we're going to see an American straight-pull rifle; I just hope it's the former rather than the latter. GDTM

LETHAL FORCE LAW: Get the Facts

Massad Ayoob's first book on the use of deadly force by the private citizen in defense of self and others, In the Gravest Extreme, is considered the authoritative text in its field. Deadly Force is the follow-up to this groundbreaking guide, incorporating Ayoob's thirty extra years of experience, during which he's been an expert witness in weapons cases, chair of the Firearms Committee of the American Society of Law Enforcement Trainers, and much more.

This guide will help you understand any legal and ethical issues concerning the use of lethal force by private citizens. You'll also learn about the social and psychological issues surrounding the use of lethal force for self-defense or in defense of others. In addition to exploring these issues, Ayoob also discusses the steps a responsible armed citizen can and should take in order to properly prepare for or help mitigate a lethal force situation.

Weatherby SA-08 Waterfowler

Weatherby's successful SA-08 line includes their Waterfowler model, which is available in Realtree Max-5 camo for 2015. This Turkish-made semi-auto is gas-operated and utilizes two valves—one for light loads, one for heavy loads. This helps ensure that the gun cycles properly every time since the valves are matched to the shells you plan to shoot. The SA-08 Waterfowler is capable of firing 3-inch shells and comes with a drop-out trigger assembly and chrome-plated bolt. The camo finish on the gun is excellent, and there's a magazine cutoff that allows you to unload the chamber for safety. ($799; Weatherby.com)

Winchester Super X3

Winchester's Super X3 has been around for several years, and it's becoming a favorite of duck and goose hunters across the nation. For starters, it's extremely reliable thanks to the Active Valve system, which self-adjusts to the load you're shooting and allows you to use a variety of different loads without adjustment. So, the same gun that's perfect for early season teal also works for geese in December. The Super X3 comes with length of pull spacers and an Inflex recoil pad that helps mitigate kick. The receiver is made of aluminum alloy and is light, keeping bulk to a minimum and making this one of the smoothest-shooting guns on the market. It's available in both 3- and 3½-inch models. ($999.99; WinchesterGuns.com)

DOUBLES

Browning Cynergy

The Cynergy was Browning's first over/under with a low-profile action, and its forward-thinking style has made it a hit. The Cynergy comes with a mechanical trigger and barrels specifically designed to handle steel shot without damage, even after thousands of rounds. Raised grip panels make this gun easy to hang on to, even in wet conditions, and the oversized trigger guard, top lever and tang safety make the Cynergy a gun that works well with gloved hands. Other features include an adjustable comb and Inflex recoil pad with spacers. Most hunters are leery of bringing their fancy stack-barrel into a marsh, but the Cynergy comes with a Dura-Touch Armor Coating and is available in Mossy Oak Shadow Grass Blades and Realtree Max-5 camo. ($1,999; Browning.com)

Stoeger Longfowler

Whether you like a side-by-side or an over/under, the new Longfowler has you covered. The 7-pound over/under model comes with extended choke tubes and a satin walnut stock in either 12 or 20 gauge, and the side-by-side features the same length barrels, a single trigger and weighs about a half-pound more. Both guns have a matte finish that reduces glare and makes it less likely that you'll be seen, and the added barrel length makes these guns smooth swinging. The extended choke tubes make it easy to swap constriction, and both the Longfowler models are a modern, affordable interpretation of the classic duck guns of yesteryear. BUGS on the Move in Central Colorado

Edward Wilks—The Tradesmen, Rifle, Colo., 625Guns.com

At The Tradesmen, owner Edward Wilks sees a number of trends, beginning with more women than ever taking their concealed carry certification class. "It used to be, out of a class of 16, I'd have maybe two women," said Wilks. "Now, at least half my students are women and sometimes more."

The handguns these ladies favor? BUGS, or "back-up guns," because of their smaller size. The Smith & Wesson Bodyguard semi in .380 is his top seller right now, and for just under $400 customers get one with a laser sight.

More than ever, self-defense handgun ammunition is moving off the shelves here, too. Again, .380 Auto leads the pack, this time in the form of Civil Defense 50-grain loads made by Liberty Ammunition.

Across the board, long gun sales are way down. "Shotgun sales are dead," said Wilks. "I'm selling a few rifles—but only a few."

However, fully automatic firearms are moving surprisingly well, despite the fact that they are very expensive. Wilks recently moved a pair of consecutively serial-numbered full-auto M-16s, for example, for over $20,000 apiece.

Optics are big movers, too, and the market here, Wilks noted, has shifted. "We used to sell a lot of $50 to $100 rifle scopes," he said. "Now, people are spending $300 and up for a nice Leupold or Vortex model. Spotting scopes, rangefinders and binoculars are steady sellers, too."

Parts, Parts and More Parts!

Geno Valenti—Midwest Gun Works, MidwestGunworks.com

Internet retailer Midwest Gun Works (MGW) sells many parts for guns, both for repairs/replacements and upgrades.

"This time of year [late summer] with trap shooting in full swing and the hunting seasons upon us, shotgun parts, parts kits and performance upgrades are in high demand," said MGW's customer service manager Geno Valenti. "Many MGW customers order OEM [original equipment manufacturer] parts for quick repair while others will be stocking up on parts as spares, should a problem occur in the field. High performance Shotgun parts upgrades are always big sellers. Sure Cycle systems for the entire line of Benelli shotguns always remains a top seller."

For handguns, trigger upgrade kits and aftermarket grips are selling well. However, "The most popular upgrade for pistols that we sell has to be new sights. Between adjustable rears and night sight sets, we regularly have customers sending in the slides for their guns for us to install the sights for them."

Mini red dot sights, by Insight, are strong sellers here, starting at $459, while Tritium night sights by AmeriGlo are always popular.

For AR shooters, top replacement parts include spring, pin and bolt component kits.

Long-Range Center-fire Rifles and Smaller Handguns In Demand

Jim Engel—The Great Outdoors Gun Shop, Atwood, Kan., GreatOutdoorsGunshop.com

Firearms are important in Atwood, located in the rural northwest corner of Kansas. The open spaces of the Sunflower State are made for long-range shooting.

"In rifles, we are seeing a turn toward the latest, greatest, turbo-charged .264 round," said Jim Engel, store manager for The Great Outdoors Gun Shop. "We've been selling some rifles in .26 Nosler and several in 6.5-284 and 6.5 Creedmoor."

Henry lever-actions are also selling well, while Benelli leads in shotguns, followed by the Remington variants.

Kansas now allows "Constitutional Carry," and smaller handguns—the Ruger LC9s, Sig 938, Sig 238 and Smith and Wesson 642 series are going fast. "For the bigger handguns, 1911s are the best sellers," Engel said. "We sell quite a few Springfield Armory, Kimber, Smith and Wesson guns. The higher priced 1911s like the Smith Performance Center guns are doing good, for just over $1,500."

The Internet is affecting business here, but not necessarily in a good way.

"We are seeing a jump in gun transfers from the major online retailers that are undercutting our prices significantly," said Engel. "It's hard to compete with online when the price my customer is getting it for is well below what I can buy from a distributor. We are trying to be very competitive, but we can't just give it away and make nothing." GDTM
